smtplib is a small, yet useful, email server used to view and handle email messages via SMTP. Key features: Easy to use interface allows you to inspect the email messages Highlights displayed in red are new items since last time Hidden email messages do not affect your work Double-click to open popup notification or bring window to the front. Start or stop the listening process Allows you to specify the number of messages to keep and set up alerts What's more, you can set up alerts Router SMTP Proxy for HTTP/HTTPS traffic Donations If you like my work and want to support me financially, there are a few ways to do so: If you have a PayPal account, you can send a donation through PayPal. You can also support me with Bitcoin. I don't care. I'm pleased it's closed. Being limited to 400 points is frustrating. If I'm gonna level my whole army, I'll do it on a game board. To be honest, I don't even know what my army would be like on WoTC. I'm hoping the new R&S will still have 400 max points. And I agree with both of you. All but 1 of the ingredients are widely available. I've always had a good supply of them. The 1 that I'm missing is the base, but should be easy to pick up if I have to and not too expensive. The Alchemy part is similar to the the one used in the game. It's made in part of a box of six pieces that you can get from a large number of random things available. There's also the "magic stuff" which is pretty easy to get, but you have to work to get it. I find the "magic stuff" makes a somewhat awkward, but acceptable use of the dice to get out of the box. The population that I'm running with is not a large one, but it is difficult to get to in the 200-odd turn limit. There are only so many things that can be used to destroy a country in one turn. I'm rather happy with it so far. I've got the country mostly down to the "good" and "bad" component level. It's almost like that is enough to run the game. If I'd been giving this a go over 10-12 years ago, there would be no doubt I'd have nailed the Small email server whose purpose is to help developers and testers view sent email messages via SMTP connections. Simple looks You can find the program sitting quietly in the system tray without interfering with your work. A double-click on the tray icon brings the main panel to your view. The GUI looks clean and simple, focuses on providing quick access to the key features of the utility, and conceals several configuration settings under the hood. You can check out details about each email message (e.g. subject, sender's address), delete the selected email or all of them with a single click, save data to a file, as well as inspect or view the email messages. In addition, you can easily start or stop the listening process. Configuration settings You are allowed to run the utility at Windows startup and minimize it to the system tray, inspect messages instead of viewing them when you click on the popup notification, and specify the maximum number of messages to keep. What's more, you can set up alerts when a new message arrives, namely show popup notifications, automatically view and inspect the message, bring main window to the front, and scroll message list to show the new items. Q: New framework (core-site.xml and other) is not found I'm using Openshift Origin as a template to deploy a new application. When I try to deploy the application the error below is displayed: The image below is a screenshot of the log file. From the log it seems that it is not finding the war file but rather the libraries. Can anyone help me in the right direction. Thanks! A: I think that is Java level issue. I tested in my environment. And it works fine. I just had to install Java 8 and update EAP templates I have no idea why it is not running in your environment. Q: JBoss Wildfly + Spring Boot: cannot access relative paths I have a WAR file (it's a Spring Boot application that uses resources from a /src/main/resources folder) that runs fine in the JBoss embedded web server (I'm running version 8.2.1). However, I'd like to deploy the WAR to Wildfly and run the WAR in an external server. But when I put the WAR into Wildfly 8.2.1 it cannot resolve relative paths anymore (see this link for the difference between embedded and external b7e8fdf5c8
